

Women's cheap car insurance and motoring careers

Ok, so the website has already looked at some of the more obvious motoring careers, notably missing out mobile hairdressing and catering, but what about something a bit more unusual to put on the form when your women's car insurance company asks, "employment?"

Woman tank driver required

Apparently, according to SSgt Gavin Ball at the Army Careers website, women can't drive tanks in the Royal Armoured Corps. Female soldiers can be trained to drive armoured vehicles, but they probably won't drive one at the frontline. So, 'tank driver' on your car insurance application is out.

And no, a 4x4 Chelsea Tractor does not count as a tank.

Well, I got a brand new combine harvester

There doesn't seem to be much on the web about female tractor drivers either. Promisingly, I read a recruitment ad for "tractor driver female", but on closer inspection the employers wanted a tractor driver and "female helper for the admin".

And the Gold Award for 'putting employment gender stereotypes back forty years' goes to: the "friendly arable farm on the Beds/Cambs border".

Female stunt driver wanted

There are plenty of women stunt players in Hollywood, but women stunt drivers, credited on films for their work, are a bit few and far between. Janet Paparazzo and Melissa Stubbs are credited for their stunt driving in movies such as We Own the Night, 2007, and Fantastic 4: Rise of the Silver Surfer, 2007, respectively, but we imagine that stunt driving is quite a male dominated industry.

When asked how she got into stunt driving, Melissa said, "I used to rent cars, bring them to parking lots and bring them back with the front wheels wobbling."

Erm! We wouldn't recommend that as a training technique.

Adventurous women in unusual cars, where else can we go?

There is a female bob sled team – they might need a driver. How does that grab you?

No! Well, let's go back a step.

Woman car insurance and the dragon's den

Mobile hairdressers and catering companies don't have to be as ordinary as some shortsighted people might imagine.

Many a young woman has set her entrepreneurial sights on the top and started from the driver's seat of a small van. Property development, event planning, interior design, landscape gardening; they are all big money-making businesses that can be masterminded (at least initially) from a stylish Mercedes Vito or a snazzy VW Transporter Sportline.

And when you've established your brand, what could be more satisfying than seeing a whole fleet of liveried cars and vans with your trademark logo and oh-so-chic styling whizzing around local and national streets carrying your goods and services to the style-hungry, discerning public.

Ooh, it sounds good, I might give up the women's car insurance market and give it bash, myself.

Of-course, a liveried fleet would be a whole different kettle of fish for the car insurance company, but at the start, when you're a one woman band, even though your usage would be insured as a business, your gender is still a pertinent issue.
